The Trojan Horse

The Greek fought the Trojans and year after, Troy was surrounded. Its people were in fear. But in darkness one night, without any warning, the Greeks packed their ships and were gone by the morning.

The Trojans walked out of their city next day and laughed in amazement. "The Greeks ran away!"

But something was left. In silence it stood, vast and intriguing, a horse made of wood. Nobody knew just why it was there. Some wondered and worried but most didn't care. "It's so magnificent! It's such a size! We're victorious! This is our prize!"

They dragged it through the tall city gate. "This horse, that we've captured, will never escape!" The war-weary people felt only joy. Till late in the evening they were dancing in Troy.

Night fell. All slept. None heard the faint sound. The wooden horse opened. Greeks leapt to the ground. Odysseus, the hero, led his men out. They silenced the guards before they could shout.

Then they opened the gate and their army rushed past. The Trojans despaired. The truth was clear at last: "The Greek never left! Their horse was a ploy!" With their horse they have captured the city of Troy.
